

It's an abortion, whether you like it or not.

Whether one believes in evolution, Buddha, Krishna, Allah, the universe or the God of the Bible, everyone knows that when a woman (yes, I said woman, not birthing person) conceives, what she conceives, will become a human being... as long as the gestation process is not interrupted/ended. Gestation is a natural process that ends the same way, every time: with another, new, unique human being.

Now let's follow that unique human forward 12 to 15 years, when that human, boy or girl (male or female, should you prefer), will go through another totally natural and unavoidable maturation process: puberty.

During this process, the gender organs, gender chemicals, gender distinctions, etc., experience their maturation, just as in gestation all the other bodily systems experience theirs.

Unless interrupted/ended, that unavoidable process will end, every time with a new, unique human man or human woman (human male or human female, should you prefer).

As in gestation when an abortion ends a natural, unavoidable process, so in puberty when "puberty blockers" interrupt/end a totally natural, unavoidable process, an abortion has taken place.

If not "messed with", a human fetus will mature into a human being. Not too long thereafter, if not "messed with" that immature human will experience puberty and will mature into a human man or a human woman.

Interrupting/ending that process is abortive: heinous: murderous: fiendish: evil.

Does your church stand against it from its pulpit? For that matter, does it stand against abortion of human fetuses?

A case can be made equating the two, wouldn't you say?
