

It's not the guns... nor the legislators... ?

We all know that guns don't shoot people, people do. Removing guns only hurts good guys. As a thought exercise, let's take that principle and apply it to electing our legislators.

Imagine legislators as the guns. Indeed, they are shooting at us in almost every area of our lives.

But just like the guns, they can only legally exercise the power that we, the electorate, give them.

We think of ways to educate people about guns; teach them not to be afraid of them; that they are tools, not scary entities with wills of their own. Only with a super-majority of changed heads/hearts, will the gun control madness stop.

In the same way that we believe in educating people about guns, we should educate people about their legislators. Only then will the dangerous-shooting-at-innocents legislators get replaced with the much safer shooting-only-at-bad-guys legislators.

An effective strategy exists which at once, puts the bad guys on the defensive and informs the electorate toward much better decision-making and voting practices. It requires taking offense.

I call it "attacking lies with truth", and follows, a brief explanation and description.

The left, aka bad guys, global elites, the cabal, _____ fill in the blank, prize their "intellect" and their "compassion". They are the self-proclaimed "smartest people in the room".

In similar fashion, they prize their compassion. They care more about the oppressed, the at-risk, the under privileged, than Jesus Himself!

But they're not the smartest people in the room, and their arguments are always nothing more than largely thoughtless emotional appeals, designed to bypass thinking.

And neither are they the most compassionate, their "help" programs always enslaving those they purport to help.

It's been our observation that their ability to convince majorities of their self-proclaimed attributes, only allows the electorate a vicarious "reality" that they don't really possess.

By siding with these smart, caring legislators/pundits/experts, they feel smart and caring themselves... whether they are or not. By supporting these smart, caring experts, they've not only made themselves feel better about their having-done-nothing, but are now convinced that they have actually done something. And they have... they've dug another shovelful from the graves of their personal freedoms and individual liberties.

Enough explanation. How about a long neglected antidote; a counter point?

Let's aggressively point out each and every time their “intelligence” is nonsense. Let's point out each and every time their “compassion” is hateful and hurtful.

Signage. Stickers. Informational handouts. Personal conversations. Broadcasts where and when possible. Doorknob hangers. The ground-level equivalent of “leaflet drops”.

In other words, expose these phonies for the lying phonies that they are... teaching people about the guns and their proper use such that they won't be afraid of them, and will recognize the misuse when they see it.
