

Second-Hand Smoke

Limbaugh used to joke about something that Nancy Pelosi used to say all the time. Whenever she would advocate for something onerous to all of us, she'd say that it was being done "for the children."

Limbaugh used to make fun of her voice and the voices of a number of other women in Congress who'd say the same thing in defense of some onerous new regulation or law. They always trotted out the women to make this claim since the "motherly" aspects of what was being done were ostensibly more believable when being made or claimed by a mom.

As in anything that comes from the enemy, it was all a lie and was upside down, backwards, hurtful, harmful, destructive and frequently deadly. BUT... it was "for the children."

Here's a good example: the SCHIP (State Children's Health Insurance Program). I'll never forget Hillary Clinton's support of the program and her suggestion for its funding: a tax on cigarettes.

But cigarettes, you see, are the enemies of the state, of our finances, of our health, of humanity itself. But we won't ban their sale because, you see, moneys raised from the sale are "for the children."

Second-hand smoke regulations are also "for the children." Grownups can change location to get away from the stuff, or can tell someone to put out their cigarette, or can make rules in their establishments, be they restaurants, bars, businesses, homes, etc.

But the children are at the mercy of the grownups who may subject them to that deadly stuff that we won't outlaw because we need the taxes it generates for healthcare "for the children." It's beautiful, isn't it?

For numerous generations, we had censorship laws governing "decency" in various media, including advertising. Remember when Joe Camel was outlawed because he ostensibly appealed to juveniles, inciting their desire to smoke?

Even more recently, flavored vaping devices were outlawed altogether in some states because kids might be attracted to buy/use them because they taste like strawberries or bubble gum instead of tobacco. Of course, this too was "for the children."

It's not just the world of smoking/vaping you know. Haven't you seen or heard how much tax money is spent on the regulation of car seats and the associated laws surrounding their use? I hear radio ads for having kids in the "right car seat," five to ten times per day! Think about what's been spent on regulators getting involved in design, in monitoring manufacturing, in ensuring the "proper" instructions and warnings on the packaging, on the human talent to produce and record the media spots, on the distribution of information to the enforcing agencies and what it costs to write, produce and distribute it all, etc, etc, etc. Grownups don't sit in car seats. It's all done "for the children."

What about childhood dosing in over-the-counter drugs and remedies? Who pays for the testing, the monitoring, the enforcement of packaging information and cautions, the enforcement of locations in drug stores? Who pays the manufacturer's costs for separate manufacturing, packaging and labeling? We do, by the way: the cost increases are caused by government regulators and then passed on to us, and it's all very heavily regulated don'tcha know! But it's all "for the children."

We could go on and on and on with this, but you can just look around your home or office or car or store and see myriad regulatory examples of how our government does almost all its dirty work of controlling your life and mine "for the children."

But do they really do these things for our children, or do they do these things to our children, and at times, against the parents' wishes?

As we've allowed more and more involvement of our government into the lives of our children, we've unconsciously ceded control of our children, and of our own lives.

The government diabolically offers "things to keep them safe and protected." That's the actual language of the "Text4Baby" ads that run all over the country, many times per day, encouraging pregnant mothers to sign up, free, with their baby's due dates and then receive parenting instructions, safety tips, things "to keep them safe and protected," appointment reminders – which means you're giving the government not only your child's due date, but also your child's medical appointment dates.

The program is run by The Administration for Children and Families division of HHS and is as invasive as it gets. Well-funded, too.

As an aside, their deputy secretary, in charge of much of HHS' decision making, is a man, formerly married and with children, living as a woman, having changed his name to Rachel and having been awarded an Admiralty appointment by our current government.

Today, one can go into a public library and/or a school library and find pornography available to children, including homosexual pornography. In more recent years, one can find in those places, materials that encourage children to question whether or not their parents lied to them when they told the kids what gender they are.

Here in CT where I am, and I suspect in other states as well, schools have been empowered to provide abortions for young, teenage girls without being required to inform the parents thereof.

At higher-up levels, the US Department of Justice for example, the federal government has defined parents' protestations of such things mentioned above as acts of domestic terrorism when those protestations happen at the school board level where curriculum and library content decisions are being made.

But long before any materials got into a classroom, or a library, or a curriculum, someone made the decision to do that. Someone wrote it and got paid for it. Someone approved that.

Someone illustrated it and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone proofread it and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone sent it to the publisher and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone recommended it to be published and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone laid it out either in an old-fashioned layout room or on a computer screen and got paid for it.
Someone approved that.
Someone began printing it, including all the press operators, folding, handling and packaging folks and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone decided which schools and libraries the stuff would go to, and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone put those boxes in trucks to be shipped to those various locations and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone put those books on shelves and/or distributed those curricula and got paid for it. Someone approved that.

Someone looked the other way when it got onto a library shelf or into a school classroom and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone got to the Attorney General of the United States to write to school boards, instructing them to request intervention and what the intervention(s) ought to be, and got paid for it. (Didn't know that, did you?) Someone approved that.
The Attorney General followed those “approved” letters and began to order the Justice Department to begin enforcement at school board meetings and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone ordered police to go to school board meetings for the purpose of removing protesters and got paid for it. Someone approved that.
Someone, a “law enforcement officer,” entered a school board meeting and forcibly removed a protester who was attempting to protect his/her child from all of the above, and got paid for it. Someone approved that.

Shall I go on?

How did we get here? It is obvious from the above that none of this happened like the switching on of a light. It took a little more than just the flip of a switch, yet at each and every stage, we – you and I – were asleep at all those switches, while someone got paid for it and someone approved it.

Here's one reason why.

As I mentioned above, we let our guard down under the assumption that our government, which is ostensibly doing all of these things “for the children,” was, in fact, doing everything to destroy our children.

“Ooh... preacher man... you're crazy to say such a thing!”

What our government and those influencing it are doing is far from anything that might benefit our children. Let me get a little crazier. They are sacrificing our children, and on altars that would not merely offend our sensibilities but enrage all of our senses.

Must I demonstrate this to you? Alas, I know I must.

Here is just a short list of some things that are going on, all of which have gone through that tedious, arduous approval process described above.

The Holy Grail of progressive politics, abortion, is being guarded, protected, advocated, celebrated, funded and lauded at a rate and in ways that would disgust you were I to share them with you. Children are being sacrificed.

Infanticide, being called other things, even being called abortion, is being advocated in numerous places and has become legally protected in at least one state, California, in legislative abortion language that uses the word perinatal rather than prenatal. Abortion, I needn't tell you, is prenatal, else it is not abortion.

What then is perinatal? It is what happens before and after, emphasis here on after, -natal.

I'm not an OB-GYN, but I know that birth ends pregnancy. Peri-natal killing is not abortion. Children are being sacrificed.

Drag shows with flamboyant, drag-wearing homosexual men are popping up at libraries, locally available public places and some restaurants. TV and Internet shows with little kids themselves in drag are everywhere. There are Internet channels devoted to these monstrosities. Discovery TV network has one running even now.

Taco Bell, a division of Yum! Brands, comes to mind as one of the restaurants that is sponsoring monthly drag shows for kids.

Along with Taco Bell, Yum! owns KFC, Pizza Hut and other well-known businesses. Children are being sacrificed.

Curricula encouraging kids to question that which the Creator has endowed them with at birth, as being a mistake that needs amputation or reconstruction. Children are being sacrificed.

Doctors are amputating healthy organs on the notion that the Creator made a mistake when creating the body, based upon a dissatisfied and unhappy teen, preteen, child! Children are being sacrificed.

Injections being called "protection against disease" (for which diseases the children are not at risk) for children as young as six months have been approved with no testing having been done before being approved by the US FDA. Children are being sacrificed.

Doctors have been financially incentivized to vaccinate children regardless of medical indication or medical condition/history of the child. When 63% of a pediatric practice is vaccinated, the practice receives $400 per child, with adverse events and deaths from vaccines going over 90% unreported. Children are being sacrificed.

There are now shots for pregnant mothers for the supposed purpose of inoculating the fetus against that for which there is zero risk. Children are being sacrificed.

Within 12 hours of birth in this nation, the US of A, every newborn receive their first Hepatitis shot, the first of three, the rest coming within the next few months. Children are being sacrificed.

Hormone replacement therapies for those as young as 11 (and some younger!) are being approved by healthcare "pros" and agencies with zero testing on any of them, or on the very idea itself. Children are being sacrificed.

TV programs are being aired that are geared toward changing children's minds and hearts against their parents' teaching and/or religion.

Courts are allowing children to "divorce" their parents.

By forcing a population to cover their collective faces, including the faces of any child over the age of two, we sacrificed our children's innocence and very childhoods, teaching them to fear their friends, their teachers, their families and all other perfectly healthy people... teaching them to fear fresh air.

We sacrificed our children's education, having them miss two full years of it.

We sacrificed our children's society with their friends and relatives, robbing from them the ability to see smiles, approval, love; from one another, from family members and from strangers whom they may/must/should now fear.

We sacrificed our children's health, depriving them of much needed oxygen, causing acne and trench mouth and damaging their immune systems by robbing them of exposure to the natural biome.

Children are being denied necessary medical treatment unless their parents consent to the child being part of a drug trial/experiment.

Children are being sacrificed, and much of what is being done TO the children is being touted as being "for the children."

Have you had enough, or will you continue to sit by while our government, yes, our government forces us to sacrifice our children on various specious altars? Hmm?

I dunno ... Although it's probably not such a good idea, I think they were better off with second-hand smoke.
